

'All what you taught me'

You walked into my life, as the sun arrives into everyone's morning...
You hit my heart, as a wandering star lights up the darkest night...

You took out of the deepest corner of my being,
all the hidden feelings of love that were kept in secret...

You surrounded my heart with tenderness...
but you also gave it the cruelest sorrow...

You taught me to be mean, to be vain...
to be selfish... to be cruel...

You taught me that love wasn't worth the sacrifice to wipe away the stupid pride and vanity of ourselves...

You taught me that no one deserved you Because you're beyond all humans,
but I was worth your touch, your love...
However, I had to pay the price of such gift...

All these lessons I didn't want to learn...
Because, that wasn't the purpose of love...

Ironically, I learned at the end a little lesson, which you couldn't accept...
I learned to protect myself...
even from the one I love the most...
I could run away and not look back...
I was able to build a fortress and close myself...

You couldn't deal my change...
Accept it... you forced me into it...
Embrace your guilt...
and let me heal the wounds you inflicted on me...

From all you taught me,
the simplest and cruelest lesson I learned...
To protect my own love and heart from you.